

Since the relaxation of the rules has allowed corporations to own more and more of the radio stations in any one area, the quality of radio to this consumer (ME), has declined. It seems that time is indeed the great killer of all, and it's broadcast radio's turn. Radio, now, is so predictable. I'm not a zombie, and I don't like being treated like one.

Not only should this stop, the cause for it getting to this point should be reversed. Stop trying to fix things that aren't broken. When the big corporations own something, only they will benefit. The theory of "Whats good for Standard Oil is good for America" was disproven ages ago. Why does history have to repeat itself?

I'm a white male born and raised in the upper midwest in 1950. It was a drag having one tv channel to grow up on, but they REPORTED the news back then on tv and radio, it wasn't sensationalized.

Allowing high-density corporate ownership has driven so much of the spontinaiety of broadcast away.

I am not in favor of this!
